Trainers:

Wolfgang Polt, Project Leader, Director of POLICIES at the Institute for Economic and Innovation Research of Joanneum Research Ltd., Austria. He is an economist with extensive experience in innovation research and policy studies in science, technology and innovation policy. The scope of the studies includes policy design, policy evaluation and policy implementation.

Gilbert Ahamer, Component 4 Leader, senior international expert at the Environment Agency Austria, studied physics and later economics, and environment. However, the complexities of real life and globalisation are better covered by interdisciplinary fields such as geography, social sciences, humanities and didactics.

Inese Gavarane, Resident Twinning Advisor at Shota Rustaveli National Science Foundation of Georgia, studied biology, education, business administration and laboratory quality management. Over the last decade she has played lead roles in number of interdisciplinary projects in both public and private sectors.

Target of this training: share good practice examples and practically train Georgian PhD students and young scientists for efficient international research networking.
